

Blossoming blunders

Elsi, protected by Nationwide®
since 2015

Breed:
Siberian Forest cat

Loves:
Mischief

Warning:
Will eat anything

When Elsi's mom brought home lilies, she didn't realize just how toxic they are to pets—and neither did Elsi when she ate one.

Fortunately, Elsi was protected by Nationwide® pet insurance, so her eligible veterinary expenses from this munching mishap were covered.¹

"With Nationwide, I'm not worried about having thousands of dollars in vet bills, which is a huge relief. I can always get [my pets] treated, and it won't be a huge issue."

— Clara C., pet parent of Elsi, protected by Nationwide since 2015

How pet insurance works

Let's say your pet took a nibble from a toxic plant like Elsi did. Here's how Nationwide pet insurance would help cover their veterinary visit:

- 1 Your vet (or any licensed veterinarian) treats your pet's plant toxicity
- 2 You pay the invoice of $2,208²
- 3 You submit a photo of your paid invoice
- 4 Nationwide reimburses your eligible expenses

Assuming you've selected our most popular 70% plan and have met your annual deductible, you'll receive $1,546 cash back, along with the knowledge your pet is ready to spring back into action.¹

Pet care tips for spring

Watch out for toxic landscaping plants like sago palm, aloe and oleander on walks with your dog.

Keep toxic flowers like lilies, tulips, gladiolas and others out of the house to protect feline friends.

As reptiles emerge from brumation, schedule a health check with your veterinarian to ensure they're fit and healthy.

Use pet-safe cleaning products. Keep pets in the other room during cleaning, and away from freshly cleaned spaces until they are dry.

When a surprising situation blossoms, be ready with Nationwide pet insurance.
